Reading

Again

by Donna Ashworth

We'll meet again, of that I'm sure,
and though I should not rush,
I know that time is running out,
I wish the clocks would hush.
For there is more I need to do, things you would hold so dear and then I've lots to tell to you when, once again, we're near.
I'll tell you of the starlit nights
and know you saw them, too, looking from a different place
but seeing the same view.

I'll make you laugh with tales of joy, adventures through and through.

I'll dip my toes in crystal seas
and bring that back to you.

We'll meet again, of course we will.
Till then, sweet time must bend.

I have so much to do until I see you once again.
