Poem

Raise One Last Glass

We'll not pretend you were flawless, nor paint your days in gold - but you filled our lives with laughter, and stories warmly told.
You walked the woods at sunrise, your faithful dogs in stride, their paws and your sure footsteps in rhythm, side by side.
You cherished home and hearthlight, the love that filled your soul was your wife whose heart you treasured, and your children made you whole.
And oh, the gleam of chrome and steel, the engine's gentle roar, each classic car a time machine travelling roads you'd loved before.
Though shadows sometimes found you, the light you gave was true; and every heart you touched here still carries part of you.
So, we lift our glass in kindness, we recall his steady grin - for though the chair sits empty, his spirit's driving in.
