POEM

In The Garden At Dusk

by Joyce Grenfell

In the cool of the garden when the evening draws in,
Serenity waits where the shadows begin.
In the fragrance of dusk and the murmur of clover,
The concerns that we carried pass peacefully over.
Flowers in their fullness shed blessings about,
And the turmoil of living fades quietly out.
Hope glimmers through each evening star,
And our cares will shrink to the size that they are.

Blooms Of Affection

by Nathaniel Bard

In gardens where affection grows,
Each petal a tender tale it shows.
Love, like sunlight, softly flows,
In blooms of pink, affection glows.

Roses whisper sweet in ear,

Lilies listen, love to hear.

With every blossom, draw you near,

In flowers' language, crystal clear.

In every hue, a promise kept,
Through storms and seasons, love has slept.
Now in full bloom, our hearts have leapt,
In gardens of affection, secrets wept.
